Living Through the People's War in Nepal

In Hope and In Fear
A View From Dolakha: Negotiating Nepal’s Two Policies

Chapter 1

We have come to think of it as home, yet we are not sure what lesson we have learned from this experience.

The increasing distance felt by volunteers who had become part of their daily lives.

For reasons of both the community which had become part of their daily lives.

We must consider the community which had become part of their daily lives.

The increasing distance felt by volunteers who had become part of their daily lives.
Neighboring Nepal, Two Poles: A View from Dolakha

More comfortable than life in the jungle, the huts were only devoted to the cause.

Copal Barman was devoted with the essentials of his craft, and became Steve's informal mentor of sorts. He had understood the language of the secret, and could now communicate on that level.

The following episode illustrates...

On the night of the celebration, the huts were illuminated with lights, and the atmosphere was festive.

On the evening of the celebration, the huts were illuminated with lights, and the atmosphere was festive.
The afternoon was spent at the community center, where the volunteers gathered to prepare for the evening. The atmosphere was busy and energetic, with people being assigned tasks and working on various projects. The volunteers were divided into groups based on their skills and areas of interest, with some focusing on organizing food donations, while others were working on setting up tables and chairs for the coming event.

...contended and our existences all rest on a need to feel safe and secure within our own communities. Our work as volunteers has allowed us to form connections and build relationships with others from different backgrounds. These connections have been invaluable in helping us to understand the experiences of others who may be facing similar challenges.

The success of our volunteer efforts is a testament to the power of coming together to support each other. By working together, we are able to make a difference and create positive change in our communities. Our goal is to continue to grow and expand our efforts, so that we can reach even more people and make a greater impact.
